DAY 2

Sunday

5/16/21

Bogotá to Villa de Leyva

Villa de Leyva is one of the few towns in Colombia to have preserved much of its original colonial style and architecture. The streets and large central square are paved with cobblestones, and many buildings date from the 16th century. The valley in which Villa de Leyva sits is rich in fossils, and many fossils were used as decoration in the original buildings in the area.

La Candelaria

Walk in the heart of old, historic Bogotá, known as La Candelaria, which is home to a great number of restored 300-year old homes and public buildings. Visit Plaza Bolívar, the San Francisco Church, the lively pedestrian street "Calle 11" bursting with local restaurants (some family-owned for eight generations), and perhaps the 17th-century Santa Clara Convent.

The Gold Museum

Visit the famous Gold Museum, which houses over 33,000 gold pieces from Colombia's most relevant pre-Hispanic cultures. Learn about how they used gold in political and social occasions, their metallurgical techniques, and as expressions of their Cosmo vision, myths, and offerings.

Lunch

For lunch you will try a special menu, including the best of the "santafereña" gastronomy, local from Bogotá, including the famous Ajiaco.

Drive to Villa de Leyva

After lunch, drive about four hours to the lovely colonial town of Villa de Leyva, passing lush, green cattle farms and pastoral scenes. Stop briefly at Boyaca Bridge, site of the decisive battle of August 7, 1819, that secured independence for Colombia from the Spanish monarchy. Monday
5/17/21

Villa de Leyva

Villa de Leyva was founded on June 12, 1572 by Hernan Suarez de Villalobos and named after the first president of the New Kingdom of Granada, Andrés Diaz Venero de Leyva. Villa de Leyva is known as one the finest colonial towns in Colombia and was declared a National Monument on December 17, 1954 to preserve its architecture. It is located in a high-altitude valley at 7,050 feet, which was once covered by sea, leaving fossil remains from the Mesozoic era, from 250 to 65 million years ago.

Hike in Iguaque National Park

Drive north for about 45 minutes to Iguaque National Park. Hike about three hours through Andean cloud forest, a unique ecosystem found in only 28% percent of the world. Over 1,700 species of birds are found in Colombia; look for some of the more exotic ones, including the Toucan barbette, mountain tanagers, and colorful hummingbirds. You will see a variety of cloud forest plants, such as giant tree ferns, large bromeliads, aricacia flowers, various types of orchids, and endemic Andean bamboo.

On the one hand, calm and silence are the essence of Barichara, a town with cobblestone streets that belongs to the Colombian People's Heritage Network and has a warm, dry climate. On the other hand, this is an excellent base from which to bike, hike, and whitewater raft. Hikers, climbers and skiers visit to explore the sweeping slopes and beautiful vistas. The town itself is known for its annual music festivals, art exhibitions, expositions and conventions. That's not to mention the town's variety of chocolate shops - some say they make Argentina's best chocolate!

Hike on the famous 18th-century cobblestone Royal Road this morning, starting near your hotel in Barichara, and ending at the small village of Guane. Your three-hour hike on this excellent old road is a birdwatcher's delight. Begin in bosque seco (dry forest), and hopefully see parakeets, tanagers, smooth-billed anis, sparrows, finches, vermillion-catchers, red-capped cardinals, and mot mots. Over the hike, you will descend about 1,000 feet to Guane, a lovely and quaint rural town. Enjoy lunch in Guane.

DAY 9

Sunday

5/23/21

Tayrona National Park to Cartagena

The city of Cartagena is a major port founded in 1533, located on the northern coast of Colombia in the Caribbean Coast Region. The port, the fortresses, and the group of monuments of Cartagena were selected in 1984 by UNESCO as significant to the heritage of the world, having the most extensive fortifications in South America. A system of zones divides the city into three neighborhoods: San Sebastian and Santa Catalina with the cathedral and many palaces where the wealthy lived and the main government buildings functioned; San Diego or Santo Toribio, where merchants and the middle class lived; and Getsemani, the suburban popular quarters.

Drive to Cartagena

Drive on one of Colombia's main coastal roads for about four hours to Cartagena de Indias, a city that combines centuries of history and culture within its walls. The landing of thousands of slaves from West Africa and migrations in the late 19th century make this a very diverse region.

Lunch

Stop halfway to Cartagena at the city of Barranquilla and enjoy Caribbean fare for lunch at the restaurant La Cueva. La Cueva is known as the place where Gabriel García Márquez began writing One Hundred Years of Solitude.

Street Food in Cartagena

Walk through "Seven Paradises" of street food, unnoticed by tourists and worshipped by locals. Tempt yourself at every stop with the original recipes that inspire the new Colombian cuisine and enjoy the product of this unhurried life.

Cartagena

Founded in 1533, the vast riches plundered by Spanish colonists turned the piedra corralina (the coral stone) into the most breathtaking city in the New World. 470 years later, Cartagena's colonial architecture provides a stunning backdrop to one of the most culturally vibrant cities in the Americas. There's more to the city than just the picturesque streets. Each corner of "La Heroica," as the city became known for its rich history of resistance and rebellion, hides a cultural treasure ready to be discovered.

Established in 2003, Cairngorms is the United Kingdom's largest national park. With hundreds of paths and trails through 1,700 square miles of spectacular landscape, it's been called one of the Top 20 Places to visit in the World.

San Fernando & Felipe Fortress

Take a short boat ride to visit San Fernando, the first fortress built to defend Cartagena. Continue to the fortress of San Felipe de Barajas, a masterpiece of architecture and military engineering. It was constructed by the Spaniards to defend the city during the times of the corsairs.
